Dr. Carlos Néstor Cámpora (Argentina)

Dr. Carlos Néstor Cámpora graduated as a physician in 1989 at Universidad Nacional de Ciencias Médicas of the city of La Plata, Province of Buenos Aires, with an outstanding general point average of 9,40, and obtained his degree as specialist in Internal Medicine in 1994.

Homeopathy found him at six years of age as a patient, but he has been an ardent student of homeopathy since he was sixteen years old, when he started reading tirelessly the old classical masters. He is a certified Master in Homeopathy by Asociación Médica Homeopática Argentina.

Two study and research groups have been founded and directed by him in Argentina: in 1993 the Grupo Clínica Homeopática Dinámica, and, in 1997, the Grupo de Estudios e Investigación Médica Homeopática de la República Argentina.

He has been teaching Homeopathy since 1993; since then he has been a lecturer in congresses and seminars both locally and internationally ever since. He has taught in Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, Mexico, Spain, Germany, Austria, USA, France, Holland and Hungary; he is regularly asked to lecture as a guest speaker at many homeopathic institutions and is a frequent guest key speaker at Liga Medicorum Homeopathica International's Congresses.

He has submitted numerous papers about the homeopathic treatment of very severe chronic diseases (autoimmune, psychiatric, neurological, neoplastic, genetic, infectious, etc). He has also performed detailed bibliographical and casuistic research enriching and improving the homeopathic repertory and the materia medica.

Dr. Carlos Néstor Cámpora (Argentina)

In 1998 he has designed the Double Protocol of Homeopathic Pathogenetic Trial (DPHPT) and has organized and directed the first provings performed in Argentina in fifty years; based on this, he conducted the proving of Loxosceles laeta (1998) (brown spider or killer spider) and Geranoetus melanoleucus (1999) (black-chested buzzard eagle). These are full hahnemannian provings performed by applying high quality methodological standards with the aim of selecting the most reliable and valid symptoms. Controversial and critic aspects about methodology of provings and the placebo symptoms in provings has been part of his papers and seminars in those years. He is also the author of the book: "The pathogenesis of Loxosceles Laeta, the spider of the corners, brown spider or killing spider", in 1999.

Dr. Cámpora is also focused on the systematic documentation in homeopathic practice and research on high-quality case reports; he is convinced that the study of cured clinical cases represents a source of valuable knowledge and inspiration for homeopaths and with the idea of systematically collecting the results of the homeopathic practice he founded BRECHA (Banco de Reporte y Estudio de Casos Homeopáticos de Argentina) in 2003, since then he is the President of BRECHA.

He has developed the Homeopathic Formula for the Diagnosis of the Simillimum (HFDS) a methodology based on Hanemann's teachings, that applies modern science tools, mathematics and statistics to the scientific research, analysis, thinking, and understanding of clinical cases. By transforming the homeopathic cures from occasional, random and anecdotal into invariable, predictable, reproducible and systematic, the HFDS turns cured cases into true homeopathic evidence. He is well known for the publication of his high-quality reports of severe and cured clinical cases traditionally considered incurable, and his conferences about Evidence Based Homeopathy. He is also the author of the book: "Homeopathic Formula for the Diagnosis of the Simillimum: Approach Strategies for Clinical Cases" in 2013.
